Private music lessons present the students with an opportunity for solo participation through technical and artistic training during weekly half-hour lessons or longer small group lessons. These lessons expand the capacity for self-expression through development of student ability to make music and to share music making with others. Because private lessons make the students conscious of their creative abilities, they are enabled to be life-long participants in music. There is a fee for each credit of private lessons. This fee is waived for Music Education and Arts Management majors, up to the number of credits required for graduation. These courses may be repeated for credit.
