Undergraduate distributions

Emergency grants are available to students who are experiencing unexpected financial stresses due to the COVID-19 crisis. Grants started to be funded in Spring 2021 by the federal government through the Higher Education Emergency Relief Fund (HEERF) III. The FAFSA was used to determine Title IV eligibility and Students who were not able to complete a FAFSA could be considered by completing an institutional application documenting their need or expenses.

Awards were distributed on a tiered approach to assist those students with the greatest need the most. Federal Pell Grant recipients received the highest grant amount since these students demonstrate the greatest financial need. Since our need-based aid programs are based on student and family income, this method also ensures that students with demonstrated financial need are assisted, that is, those most likely to be financially affected by the pandemic.

Students were required to complete an application for an award to identify their need. Award amounts were determined based on several factors, including but not limited to: Pell Grant recipients, recipients of institutional need-based aid, and recipients of other non-institutional need-based aid. These students were encouraged to complete the FAFSA.

Grants may be used for any component of the student's cost of attendance or for emergency costs that arise due to coronavirus, such as tuition, food, housing, health care (including mental health care), childcare, other educational expenses.

Distributions to Graduate Students

Emergency grants are available to students who are experiencing unexpected financial stresses due to the COVID-19 crisis. Grants started to be funded in Spring 2021 by the federal government through the Higher Education Emergency Relief Fund (HEERF) III . The FAFSA was used to determine Title IV eligibility and Students who were not able to complete a FAFSA could be considered by completing an institutional application documenting their need or expenses.

Graduate students seeking funds for expenses related to their educational needs during the pandemic were asked to fill out an application. The CRRSA and ARP require that institutions prioritize students with exceptional need and authorize grants to students enrolled in both campus and on-line programs, degree and non-degree seeking.

To help determine exceptional financial need, Midland is encouraging all U.S. citizens and permanent residents to file a FAFSA. Exceptions to filing a FAFSA may be granted but students would have to provide sufficient documentation to prove exceptional need without a FAFSA.

Grants may be used for any component of the student's cost of attendance or for emergency costs that arise due to coronavirus, such as tuition, food, housing, health care (including mental health care), childcare, and other educational expenses.

Awards will not exceed demonstrated need for funding.

7. Any instructions, directions, or guidance provided by the institution to students concerning the Emergency Financial Aid Grants.
